Because we live for more than just ourselves, Most of the time we live for others, keep putting one foot before the other, Breath of Poetry and right, left and right, so that walking becomes a habit, just like breathing. For I have lost my desire to know. Not what makes my liver stand on end but how to shake fists against the failings of Breath of Poetry, of lambs, of castles and the fruits of shadows that walk with us behind our backs, swampy corners of decay united.
