These delivery periods are not guaranteed. From each parish, subsequently three villages were chosen and about 53 mothers were interviewed from each village. While a trial in this well-defined geographical area may represent an efficacy trial, many features of the intervention strategy appear to be scalable with no loss of effectiveness.

Women were more likely to receive a home visit in the first week if they delivered.
Participants noted that while communities appreciate the education received, some of the suggested behaviours have been slow to take root. After graduating from college in the author had a degree in literature, a backpack and a strong desire to explore.

Many of the trainers were involved in developing training materials and the trust was established, pregnant women and their families were willing to listen to the CHWs and to respond to referral.
Village-based scouts notified verbal autopsy interviewers of deaths, including maternal deaths, stillbirths, and neonatal deaths, as they occurred.
