I don't know why, and I don't know what to say to them, especially on this charge that my writing shows I hate women. This article first appeared in the September issue of Doctrine and Life. The truth, in fact, is that knowledge is caused by the knower containing a likeness of the thing known; for the latter must be in the knower .

Gosse, But they differed about these principles. But if one is to examine first the operations, it might be asked whether one should not first enquire about their objects, as, in the sensitive function, the thing sensed; and in the intellectual, the thing intelligible. That not everything which causes movement need itself be moved was shown in an earlier work, Book VIII of the Physics.
